Academic unit: Antropologia. Studi interdisciplinari sulla dignità umana e sulla cura delle persone vulnerabili

Course Description:

The Blended-Learning course was developed as an educational response to contemporary challenges related to the safeguarding of vulnerable persons. Promoted by the Institute of Anthropology: Interdisciplinary Studies on Human Dignity and Care (IADC), the course offers an integrated and interdisciplinary approach to abuse prevention, combining theoretical reflection, analysis of real-life situations, and attention to institutional, cultural, and relational contexts.

Objectives

The course aims to strengthen awareness of the urgency of safeguarding and to foster a cultural shift grounded in responsibility and care. It also seeks to support participants in developing attitudes and skills that promote safe environments, encouraging both personal and collective commitment to abuse prevention and the protection of human dignity.

Learning Outcomes

By the end of the course, participants will have gained a critical understanding of the dynamics that contribute to situations of abuse and vulnerability. They will be able to interpret these situations more thoughtfully, recognize risk and protective factors, and guide their professional and community actions according to principles of responsibility, prevention, and care.

Content

The course explores key themes related to a safeguarding culture, including foundational concepts, relational and institutional dynamics, the relationship between public and private spheres, responsible communication, and the analysis of concrete cases and situations, with particular attention to practical application in diverse contexts.
